Serial Rapist Targeting Realtors Arrested After 27 Years

Wednesday 8:00 a.m. – 12:00 p.m.
Crime Analyst Supervisor and Investigative Genetic Genealogist
Michele Kennedy &
Detective Mike Trindle

In 1995, a realtor was sexually assaulted inside a model home as she was locking up the houses for the night near Parker in unincorporated Douglas County. A similar assault had occurred at a model home sales office four years earlier in 1991 in Highlands Ranch, and a suspect was arrested after another similar attack in 1999 in Lone Tree. Although DNA found at the scene of the 1995 sexual assault did not match the suspect arrested in 1999, the MO and distinctive suspect features matched the 1995 sexual assault and suspect descriptions. However, the case went cold due to the unidentified DNA.

In 2020, the Douglas County Sheriff's Office Cold Case Unit reopened the 1995 kidnapping and sexual assault and conducted an evidence review, additional forensic testing, and investigative genetic genealogy (IGG). After an unexpected result from the IGG and forensic testing, a serial rapist with a history of assaulting realtors and apartment leasing agents going back to the 1970s was identified.

Analysis of Patterns of Denial (APOD)

Wednesday 1:00 p.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Turner Forensic Psychology and Consultation

Sex offenders have great incentive to deny and/or minimize their offense, and both researchers and treatment providers regularly encounter their socially desirable response patterns. Despite the importance of distinguishing those who are lying about their innocence from those who are truly not culpable, law enforcement agencies and clinicians have few resources, other than the polygraph, to discern false denial from truthful, actual denial using scientifically supported methods. The Analysis of Patterns of Denial (APOD), a checklist of denial techniques, was developed to assist in making this distinction. It was developed by comparing a sample of guilty persons who denied their offense conduct with persons who were falsely accused (i.e., accused and investigated but later convincingly cleared by polygraph, a DNA non-match, and/or confession by another person). Items that satisfactorily discriminated between the two groups were retained in the final checklist. The APOD is intended to help those who work with sex offenders identify denial response patterns to more accurately determine if an alleged sex offender is being truthful or deceptive.

The Donald Jefferson Davis Case

Thursday 8:00 a.m. – 12:00 p.m.
Undersheriff Dan Covault & Lorina Pyle

Donald Jefferson Davis began his over 40-year long career as a pedophile and sexual predator at the age of 10. His first victim was his stepsister, who was four years old at the time of the first assault. Over the next 10 years Davis sexually assaulted his stepsister approximately 2,000 times before she ran away from home at age 14. For the next 30 years Davis became a prolific serial sex offender. Unique to sex offenders, Davis had no racial, gender or age preferences. Davis would fill his sexual desires with anyone he could manipulate, force, or threaten into doing what he wanted. This included men, woman, children, relatives and even his own son. His victims ranged in age from 4 to 44. Over the years several victims attempted to come forward and report to authorities the abuse they had suffered at the hand of Davis. For those brave enough to come forward, unfortunately nothing came of their cases. The family's fear of Davis and his mother kept him off law enforcement radar for decades, that is until his mother passed away. After the death of Davis's mother one family member broke the silence, propelling an investigation that uncovered a jaw dropping level of deviant behavior, more than 20 victims, five related suicides and several victims that in turn had become perpetrators. This is a case of investigative tenacity, never giving up on a lead, following the evidence wherever it may take you, and being courageous enough to believe in those who were never believed.

The Larry Nassar Case

Thursday 1:00 p.m. – 5:00 p.m.

Deputy Chief Andrea Munford &
Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner
Danielle Fenton

What can you do with institutional failure? During this session you will hear from two women from Michigan State University, Police and Public Safety Deputy Chief Andrea Munford along with Associate Director and Lead Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner for the MSU Sexual Assault Healthcare Program Danielle Fenton, talk about how they responded to institutional crisis, and how they fought, and continue to fight, for survivors of sexual assault.

Munford was the lead investigator in the Larry Nassar case, using trauma informed and victim centered practices to support survivors to build a case with the lead prosecutor, then continued to advocate for institutional change as an advisor to the MSU Office of the President. She will discuss lessons learned from a case spanning at least 20 years and how a plea agreement empowered hundreds of women to speak their truth.

Fenton played a critical role in standing up with helping open an on-campus sexual assault healthcare program, believed to be the nation's first at a university, to provide trauma informed care around the clock to both community and campus members. She will discuss the multiple points at which victims are retraumatized after a sexual assault, how advocates can reduce the burden that is placed on victims and how caring for the victim's physical and mental health first can produce better outcomes not only for the victim but for the investigation.

Account Takeovers

Friday 8:00 a.m. – 12:00 p.m.

Detective Kim Boik

A woman sits across from you and tells her horrific story of being sexually assaulted by her ex-boyfriend a few weeks prior. She's scared of him, doesn't want to ever talk to him again, all their texts are now deleted, there's no physical crime scene, and she refuses to make a recorded call. You want to corroborate her story and get the ex-boyfriend to confess. This course will add a tool of using account takeovers to your tool belt to help corroborate your victim's statement, elicit statements from the suspect (possibly a confession), and can potentially help you get more charges against the suspect. You as the detective will learn how to pretend to be your victim (or a witness) and reach out to the suspect over social media to talk about the case. This tool has shown success on cases that otherwise would never have been able to be charged. This course will go over legal considerations, ways to preserve the evidence, how to pretend to be your victim who is of a different age and/or gender, themes to approach in the chats, and ways to confirm who the person is that you're talking with. There are several case studies woven through to help illustrate points and one case study at the end showing how an account takeover resulted in an extremely quick guilty verdict on a cold sex assault on a child case (which we all know how difficult those are to corroborate!). The application of this tool can go far beyond sex assault investigations.
